ABSTRACT

This 1976 inventory is published to indicate the extent to which current cooperative library programs are operating, and to describe programs which may be appropriate for libraries not now participating in these organizations. Data for the inventory was gathered in questionnaires and distributed by the Bureau of Library Development in November 1976. A description is provided for each library organization, including mailing address, telephone numbers, purpose, basis of organization, type of library served, funding, publication, services, and contact persons. Tables list: (1) services provided through membership; (2) communication links between members and delivery service provided through membership; (3) members of cooperative library organizations by name of library; and (4) members of Pennsylvania cooperative library organizations by name of the organization. FOREWORD

An Inventory of Pennsylvania Interlibrary Cooperatives and Information Networks was prepared in 1972 by Natalie Wiest, Lee Lourea, and Brigitte L. Kenney of the Drexel University Graduate School of Library Science for use by the Pennsylvania Library Master Plan Committee. The inventory was not widely circulated and, with the passage of time, became out of date. Many of the cooperative programs which were beginning in 1972 developed into strong organizations by 2976; a few have become inactive as the circumstances which dictated their programs a few years ago have changed. Several new groups have come into being.

In 1975 the State Library commissioned from Drexel University's Graduate School of Library Science a study to provide a basis for planning improved cooperation among Pennsylvania libraries. That study recommends increasing the number of local cooperatives, based on geographic proximity or subject matter, so that all libraries may have the benefits of a nearby cooperative program.

This 1976 inventory is published to indicate to Pennsylvania libraries, to those who use libraries, and to those responsible for libraries the extent to which current cooperative programs are operating, and to describe programs which may be appropriate for libraries not now participating in these organizations.

Data for the inventory was gathered in questionnaires and distributed by the Bureau of Library Development in November 1976. Special thanks are due the respondents to those questionnaires. With one exception, the members of the organizations listed are institutions rather than individuals. The only formal library cooperative programs in Pennsylvania known to the bureau staff but not included in this publication are those which include fewer than three independent libraries and those which have a majority of members from outside the Commonwealth.

We anticipate publication of revised editions of this inventory at appropriate intervals. Additions and corrections should be brought to the attention of the Bureau of Library Development's coordinator of interlibrary cooperation.

DISTRICT LIBRARY CENTERS

The Library Code (Act of June 14, 1971, P.L. 324, as amended) authorizes the State Librarian, with the approval of the Advisory Council on Library Development, to designate up to 30 libraries as District Library Centers. Each with an assigned geographical area, the District Library Centers have the power to

> "...contract with any city, borough, town township, school district, county or board of trustees or managers of any local library, which wishes thereby to become part of the District Library Center system of such district. Any District Library Center shall have the power to provide direct library service to persons residing within the district, to provide supplementary library services to all local libraries within the district, and to exchange or provision of library services with other District Library Centers."

The District Library Centers are thus established as such under the provisions of state law, and local libraries which participate in the state program each have adopted resolutions of participation in the district center system.

In 1976, there were 27 District Library Centers which together covered the entire state.

State aid is paid to District Library Centers for their services. Each district center also functions as a local library, and its local library program is supported through a combination of local funds (public and sometimes private) and state aid paid to it as a local library or part of a library system.

Each District Library Center provides an interface between the local libraries of its district and the resources and services of other libraries and larger networks. Twenty-six of the District Library Centers participated in the OCLC system through membership in either the Pittsburgh Regional Library Center or PALINET (q.v.). Each District Library Center has (or will have in 1977) TWX equipment for communication with other libraries and networks on a nationwide basis.

The mailing addresses, telephone numbers and names of chief administrative officers of the District Library Centers follow. Services of the District Library Centers are shown in Tables 1-2. Local Libraries in each district are listed in Table 4.
